Richardson v. Mellish (1824)

About this Seminar

Public policy is a highly debated topic globally and in Singapore today. It is particularly pronounced in arbitration as it is one of the most popular grounds commonly used by parties to set aside Arbitration Awards in Singapore courts. But it remains a complex, academic and highly controversial subject. So far, there have been no successful attempts in the Singapore to set aside Awards on this ground, yet.

This introductory session will attempt to cover the basic principles and issues of public policy as well as case studies from overseas and locally. The session is expected to benefit general law practitioners interested in the subject of international arbitration or newly admitted solicitors & advocates.

Topics covered include:

1. What is "Public Policy"?
2. Comparative studies - public policy in Belgium, Germany, Switzerland and China
3. Distinction between domestic public policy and international public policy

4. Test for International public policy
5. Effect on Arbitration Agreement and Awards
6. Singapore's perspective and current trend
7. Final Report of the International Law Association on Public Policy as a Bar to Enforcement of International Arbitration Awards (2003)
